Montreal comedian Sam Khullar, known as Sugar Sammy, has been traveling and making people laugh around the world since 2004. A writer, actor, producer and comedian, Sugar Sammy has performed over 1,600 shows in 31 countries, in English, French, Hindi, and Punjabi. Sugar Sammy's last tour took his career to new heights as Billboard magazine declared it the top-selling Canadian tour, across all categories, in 2013, and one of the 30th highest-grossing tours in North America. The comedian first made a name for himself in 2011, after touring his English-language shows, Down with the Brown and Sugar Sammy Live in Concert, across several continents, before debuting his bilingual show, You're Gonna Rire, in his home town of Montreal. The unprecedented success of this groundbreaking show made it a cultural phenomenon. A total of 421 sold-out performances, and 372,000 tickets later, Sugar Sammy became the best-selling artist with a debut one-man show in the history of Quebec.

Sugar Sammy lives and embraces globalization, stirring up and sampling the multi-cultural melting pot that exists in most urban centres today. A smart and charismatic provocateur, he's a master at interacting with audiences in a style recalling the greats of traditional American stand-up. He presents hilarious scenarios and comments on our global society's inherent contradictions in a brilliantly entertaining way, presenting his views of his Indian roots and world travels, arranged marriages, pop culture and modern day relationships. Askmen.com dubbed him "Comedy's New Rock Star" and The Hollywood Reporter selected him as one of their "Ten Comics to Watch"
